INTRODUCTION

Veloria is a cosmetics-oriented web application designed to manage products and customer interactions efficiently.

The project focuses on building a simple yet functional e-commerce—style website using frontend and backend integration, without relying on heavy frameworks.

KEY POINTS

- 01 web-based application
- 02 focused on make up and skin care products
- 03 Frontend + Backend integration
- 04 Data handled using JSON and PHP

PROBLEM STATEMENT

Many small brands face challenges such as:

- Managing product data manually
- No centralized system to display products dynamically
- Difficulty in receiving and storing customer messages
- Lack of real-time interaction without page reload

MARKET AND RELATED COMPANY

Target Market:

- Small and medium cosmetics brands
- Online make up and skin care stores
- Startups with limited technical resources

Related Company (Veloria):

- A conceptual make up and skin care brand
- Focuses on beauty
- Aims to establish a digital presence
- Needs a simple, scalable web solution

METHODOLOGY USED

Tools & Technologies:

- Frontend: HTML, CSS, JavaScript
- AJAX: XMLHttpRequest for asynchronous communication
- Backend: PHP
- Data Storage: JSON files
- Architecture Style: Client–Server model

PROPOSED ARCHITECTURE

Flow:

- User interacts with the website (UI)
- JavaScript sends requests using AJAX
- PHP processes requests on the server
- Data is read from or written to JSON files
- Server responds with JSON
- UI updates dynamically without reload

The background is a high-contrast, abstract composition. It features a light gray, textured surface that resembles watercolor or ink on paper. Overlaid on this are various black elements: large, irregular ink splatters and blotches, particularly in the corners; and several thin, dark, brush-like strokes that sweep across the upper and lower portions of the frame. The overall effect is one of raw, expressive energy.
